"Stick Together" Veterans Are Told By Prominent Speakers

District Attorney Pratt and Emory Rockwell Address Organization Meeting of Ex-Service Men's Political League — Washington Legislation Denounced —Charges of Unfairness in Distribution of Welfare Work Relief Aired.

"The veterans must get together and stick together", said District Attorney George Pratt of Corning before an ex-service men's mass meeting, in the Grange Hall last Thursday evening. The meeting had been called to discuss the advisability of organizing for political action. District Attorney Pratt was one of several speakers to address the group, which numbered about 45 people, approximately ten of whom were women.

The meeting was called to order at about 8:30 o'clock by Dr. Amos G. Stiker, temporary chairman. Dr. Stiker then called for the election of a permanent chairman. William Lewis, long active in local veteran's affairs, was elected to serve in this capacity. Miss Leanore Runyan was chosen secretary of the meeting.

Emory Rockwell of Wellsboro, Pa., was then introduced by Chairman Lewis. Mr. Rockwell began his talk by saying that the veterans of Northern Pennsylvania had begun, as far back as the congressional election of two years ago, to realize that they were helpless. At that time a congressional candidate was selected by the political leaders of his district who was notoriously opposed to veteran's legislation.

Following this action, the speaker stated, he personally called a meeting of all veterans residing in the six counties which comprised the congressional district. At this meeting, held in Williamsport, it was decided to enter actively into politics, the course being decided upon as the only method of insuring protection of veteran's rights. Much opposition developed, however, some of it within the ranks of the veterans themselves.

At this point, Mr. Rockwell explained that the Tioga County organization had been handicapped in its early stages through the early endeavor to organize an entire congressional district at one time. This method being found unwieldly, they went back to the plan of county organization. Three representatives were then selected from each of the six counties comprising the congressional district. These eighteen members composed the district executive committee. Representatives were also chosen to represent the

Impressed By Edison Museum

B. E. Mullaney, Upon Return From Auto Trip to West, Relates Impressions Gathered From Visit to Historical Village—Crops in West Are Poor.

"The Century of Progress is a marvelous exhibit. But the Edison Institute Museum, established by Henry Ford as a memorial to his friend, Thomas A. Edison, outranks anything I have ever seen", said Bernard E. Mullaney, local Eshelman feed dealer, upon his return last week from a week's trip by auto to the Fair and other points of scenic and historic interest along the way.

Mr. and Mrs. Mullaney, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Guy Mayer, left Addison on Sunday morning, September 3. They remained over the first night at Norwalk, Ind. The following day, Monday, they continued on to Chicago, stopping enroute at South Bend, Ind., to view the grounds of Notre Dame University and the famous Notre Dame Stadium. They remained in Chicago for four days and enjoyed thoroughly the marvels of the exposition. A nip-and-tuck ball game in which the Cubs edged out the Boston Braves was also enjoyed by Mr. Mullaney and Mr. Mayer.

The party left Chicago on Saturday morning. They stopped at Ann Arbor to view the University of Michigan and continued on to Detroit, where they stopped off to look about the city and to inspect the Ford exhibits at Dearborn, particularly the Edison Institute.

In establishing this institution two hundred acres were set aside by Mr. Ford. The name "Edison" wae chosen to reflect Mr. Ford's appreciation of the inspiration which he had gained from the great inventor's genius. Serving the institute is a museum which is really a living text-book of human and technical history. The museum buildings

History of Religious Music Traced By Rev. K. E. Arnold

In Recent Sermon at Addison Baptist Church—Beginning Lost in Antiquity — First Christian Hymn Composed by Hilary, Bishop of Arles—Origin of Modern Hymns Related.

In his last sermon at the Addison Baptist Church, prior to leaving upon his vacation two weeks ago, Rev. Kenneth E. Arnold traced in a most interesting way the history of music as used in religious worship since the beginning of the Christian era. Many readers of this newspaper who were not privileged to hear Rev. Mr. Arnold in person, will no doubt appreciate the opportunity of reading his sermon. We therefore are printing the sermon in full.

When did music originate? No one knows. When was music first used in religious services? No one can tell. From a statement made in the fifth verse of the sixth chapter of II Samuel which was written 1040 years before the beginning of the Christian era we learn that King "David and all of the house of Israel played before the Lord on all manner of instruments made of fir wood, even on harps, and on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets, and on cymbals." It is also quite evident that Psalms were being sung at this time. Not until about the year 431 A. D. was it though, that the first hymn for Christian worship was composed. The author was Hilary, bishop of Arles. To what extent music was used in the services at this time we do not know. Probably the ritual filled most of the worship period.

During the sixteenth century hymns were given their rightful place in religious meetings. For this accomplishment much of the credit should be given to Martin Luther. Not only did he seek to popularize the use of hymns in church services but became the greatest song writer of his time. He believed that the laymen should be permitted to participate in public worship with the clergy. They too throught so. As a result the singing of hymns and Psalms spread not only through Germany but into other countries. Today hymns are sung all over the world. It is also true that musical instruments have been taken to nearly all, if not all parts of the world to add beauty to Christian services of real devotion.

From studying our history books we discover that the Pilgrims founded the idea of having an annual

OUR PERENNIAL VISITORS

Once again the old, troublesome village lock-up has bobbed up in Addison. About so often an inspector comes through from the Department of Correction at Albany, and proceeds to find fault with everything in sight around the village bastile.

This has happened so many times the event has become recognized as a perennial affair, a problem which like "the poor" is always with us. It is a problem that will face Addison as long as mandatory laws are in operation from Albany, as the multitude of inspectors simply must find something to find fault about, or else what excuse would there be for their job? Actually the report this fall is mild, compared to many of the threatening messages received in the past.

The village officials have been diligent of late years to take good care of the jail and keep it in sanitary condition. There is little ground for complaint on the score of cleanliness, so of late the reports have dwelt largely with the question of housing tramps in the same room used for prisoners. Although provisions have been made for locking prisoners in cells, thus segregating them as far as possible for tramps, the state officers seem to fear the tramps will contaminate those forcibly detained.

The tramp question has been a pretty sharp bone of contention in the village, regardless of the opposition voiced by the state prison board at Albany. Take it all in all, this matter has bulked pretty high in the town budget, and the town and village officials have cudgeled their brains frequently over the question of remedying the situation.

It is possible the best solution might come through the suggestion of the prison board, that the jail and tramp house be divorced. This idea would at least have the advantage of removing the tramp question out of the jurisdiction of the Albany crowd, presently.

If the town board would consider the matter it is certain some feasible plan could be worked out. A site could be obtained where a cheaply constructed, fire-proof building might be erected for two or three hundred dollars. Rough wood would be dragged on the lot that the tramps could cut for their heat, or not as they pleased. An old cook stove would serve the double duty of heating and cooking arrangements, while inexpensive supplies such as bean, oatmeal, old bread and coffee could be doled out to give nourishment to the tramps, yet not luxuries to entice them to stay or seek out the town.

If the idea were carefully worked out the tramp question might be solved far less expensively than any plan that has so far been tried.

IT'S TIME TO BUILD

The American home shortage continues to grow, according to government and other statistics of a reliable nature.

In the decade between 1920 and 1930 the country added a total of 5,600,000 families to its population. The need for new housing for that decade was approximately equal to the number of families added. In addition, a certain number of homes were destroyed by fire, obsolescence and so forth—a number which is placed at the conservative figure of 250,000 for the decade. Normal building, therefore, should have provided for about 5,850,000 families during the ten-year period.

The total number of families provided with housing in 257 cities surveyed during the decade, was 3,616,000. These 257 cities accounted for 70.8 per cent of all residential building. On that basis, the gross of new homes built in the entire country was 5,180,000, leaving us with a shortage of 698,000 homes when we entered the year 1931. And now it is reliably estimated that the shortage has reached 1,350,000.

What all this leads up to is that we are on the eve of tremendous expansion in residential building. As recovery gets underway, and men go back to work, hundreds of thousands of American families are going to replace old homes with new ones, or move from rented quarters into homes of their own. Construction prices of all kinds are going to soar—and we will look back on 1933 as the year when almost inconceivable building bargains were offered to us.

It's time to build!

LIQUOR CONTROL

With three states following the procession for repeal within a single week, little doubt exists that the Prohibition law is doomed. That being the case, the next question facing the nation is: "What will follow?"

Even those most loud for repeal, have voiced their belief the traffic in liquor should be controlled. With the control laws pretty much all gone overboard during the past twelve years, this problem is one that should not be lightly trifled with.

Doubtless the one thing which put hard liquor in the illegal class with the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment, was the matter of greed. Certainly greed and avarice for power by the bootleggers' has been one of the principal reasons Prohibition is being repealed. From this double demise, the fall of King Alcohol, and the subsequent resurrection of the old monarch, there should be deduced at least one pertinent fact—one of the worst aspects of the liquor traffic lies in its profits.

When laws are written for the control of liquor this fact should be paramount in the minds of those entrusted with the task. Whether or not one engages in controvery as to the intoxicating effect 3.2 beer, even the most ardent wet dares not deny that hard liquor taken in any appreciable quantity, makes a man drunk. Turning drunks loose on our highways these days with our millions of high-powered cars, will be like turning loose the Devil.

However the law is written to controll this almost uncontrollable situation, the liquor traffic should be stripped of its exorbitant profits, for the protection of all our people. For the profits of liquor have never yet stopped for life, for death, for this world or eternity.

FIGHTING THE RECKLESS DRIVER

This year the month of September has been dedicated to the most intensive campaign in the interest of automobile accident prevention ever carried on in this country.

The governors of 34 states and the commissioners of the District of Columbia have issued proclamations and messages. More than 90,000,000 persons—74 per cent of our total population—live in their areas. Seventy-five per cent of all automobiles in the country are registered within them, and last year about 76 per cent of the 29,000 deaths occurred in the participating territory.

In 1932 there was a decrease in automobile accidents and fatalities, as compared with 1931. This year the trend has been reversed, and the toll is again on the upgrade. The reckless, the discourteous and the incompetent still rule the highways. The public streets and roads are still shambles both for persons and for property.

Only the individual motorist can conquer this organized destruction. There are few such things as unavoidable accidents. And it has been proven that raising the safety factors of roads and vehicles does no good—the driver simply trusts to the engineers, and operates his car even more recklessly.

During the September campaign, facts and figures detailing the havoc wreaked by excessive speeds, by violations of right-of-way laws, by passing on curves and hills, by that most common of all motoring ills, discourtesy, will be brought to our attention. And all of us should consider it both a duty and a privilege to cooperate.

"I DON'T PAY TAXES"—OH, YES, YOU DO

It is estimated that 70 per cent of the national income is not subject to direct taxation—income which comes from government bonds, or is exempt from taxation because it's owner's total receipts are below the levels touched by the income tax law.

That provides a pretty sound reason for public laxness about taxation. A majority feel that it is no trouble of theirs—that it is a problem belonging strictly to that minority which must pay direct taxes.

We all pay taxes, if we earn a thousand a year or a hundred thousand—and the bulk of governmental income comes from those whose incomes are in the lower brackets.

We pay taxes when we go to a movie, buy food, turn on an electric light, take a spin in the car, go fishing, or do anything else. We pay them when we are asleep—the maker of the bed, mattress and blankets paid taxes, which he passed on to those who bought his product. The more he paid, the more we pay to sleep!

AN OPPORTUNITY IS OFFERED

It is a significant fact that recent reports from all parts of the country show growing increases in residential construction.

The meaning of that is clear. The three-year construction doldrum — in which home building was close to the non-existent point—has reached its end. The nation, instead of having an oversupply of homes, actually has a shortage, placed by various observers at around 500,000. Factories are opening up, men are going back to work, families are enlarging their budgets. And home-building always comes high on the list at such times.

The property-owner has a double opportunity—to build and repair before costs sky-rocket, and to do his bit in promoting recovery by spending money for labor and supplies. Don't let that opportunity pass!

"For the first time in the experience of present-day American newspapermen, economic news has a greater attention-compelling voltage than sex."

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS

Happenings That Affect the Dinner Pails, Dividend Checks and Tax Bills of Every Individual. National and International Problems Inseparable From Local Welfare.

The United States isn't the only country that is experiencing the trend toward recovery. During the second quarter of 1933 there was a marked upturn in commodity prices in many parts of the world, according to a survey made by the Council of Foreign Relations. Most important advances have been made in this country, in France—the sole major nation left on the gold standard—and in Graet Britain, whose managed currency policy has been the controlling factor in the rise. Other countries to show advancement include Australia, Canada, Austria, Belgium, Germany and Switzerland. In the first half of 1933, British prices were steadier than those in either this country or France. This marks a drastic change from conditions in 1931 and 1932, when British price fluctuations were often extremely violent.

This price question is keeping many a citnzen awake nights. His problem is: When will income increase in proportion to rises in the price level? The answer to that is still a question mark. Bulk of American wage-earners, particularly those in the white-collar class, will have to wait some time yet before business conditions warrant any substantial advances in their earnings. The present recovery drive, as is natural, has little to do with those who have incomes in the high or middle brackets. It is concentrated on helping those who are in the low brackets or have no income at all. Major effort is given to manufacturing new jobs and that cannot long be done, until there is a stabilization of commodity costs on a higher level. Cost-of-living has advanced materially in the past few months; most marked advances are still in the future. September 1, the new taxes on cotton, certain foodstuffs and other articles—passed to help farm relief action—went into effect.

It is faulty to speak of a government recovery program at this time. It's a Roosevelt program pure and simple. No one else really counts. They come into the limelight for a time, as did Raymond Moley, play a part designed to help the Administration, and depart. Never has the Cabinet been so submerged; the Congress is rarely heard of. The only true spokesman for present policies is the President himself. As a result, his informal speech made to neighbors in Dutchess County, New York, on a recent visit to Hyde Park, is more important than such speeches usually are. Mr. Roosevelt said that his program was simply one of neighborliness, and is based on the supposition that whatever hurts one's neighbors has no right to exist, that the communal interest is the all important thing. He expressed also the belief that the new deal program is winning, said that it will be his permanent policy.

He isn't through worrying yet, however. Next difficulty is liable to be a test of the constitutionality of his two most important pieces of legislation — the National Industry Recovery Act, under which the codes are being signed and the NRA drive is operating, and the farm relief bill. That phase is being talked about in wise circles now— "Is it constitutional?" Speculation as to the attitude of the Supreme Court justices has been rife. Opinion is that four justices will declare the program justified because of national crisis, and that four others will keep to the letter of the constitution. The unknown element, X, is Chief Justice Hughes, who might vote either way.

In case Mr. Roosevelt's legislation is thrown out by a five to four decision, he still has an ace in the hole. He could call Congress, have the number of members of the court extended from nine to eleven, and appoint two justices who agree with his political philsophy, thus giving him a six to five grip on the court. This has been considered before, and presidents have almost always appointed justices whose ideas agreed with theirs so far as governmental principle is concerned.

A few months ago inflation was the subject of the hour. Then it moved off the stage and other actors in the recovery play took its place. It's coming back again now. Some observers believe that it is inevitable in the near future; it is known that the President has been studying ways and means to bring it about and control it. A great many businesses are still as far away as they ever were from the usual sources of the new credit, and they've got to get money somewhere if they are going to be instruments in the job-providing, wage-raising drive. Start of an inflationary program is seen in the announcement that the Federal Reserve, using the power granted to it a short time ago, has been a heavy buyer of government bonds—doing this is an easy means of expanding public credit.

The answer to this question, as to so many others, is solely in the mind of Mr. Roosevelt. Congress gave him, at his demand, practically unlimited power over the currency. He has used that power cautiously to date.

Many Republicans Think Dunnigan Campaigns For G. O. P.

Albany, Sept. 19—Probably there is nothing in the rumor that the Republican organization is doing its best to have John J. Dunnigan, majority leader of the Senate, to visit every county in the State this fall, but those who have been following the New York City Democrat's campaigning so far are convinced it would be a logical thing to do. His famous prophecy at Schenectady that the Democratic party will soon "take permanent control" of all affairs of the government, national state and local, is understood to have brought criticism from his political superiors, who hadn't expected he would tell tales out of school, and who were right in thinking such statements certain to back-fire with disastrous consequences. The other day the Senator made a trip to Rochester with the result that Monroe County found out what Albany has known for some time, namely, that Mr. Dunnigan has such a high opinion of his own oratorical abilities that he seldom takes the trouble to inform himself about any subject he is discussing. On this occasion he undertook to talk about the Monroe County tax relief bill which the Democrats killed in the Senate for political reasons.

Aid in Assembly Fight

"It is difficult to believe", says the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle in referring to Mr. Dunnigan's visit, "that the local Democratic organization would offend intelligent and independent minded citizens by inviting a man of Senator Dunnigan's record and associations to be its principal speaker. Not only is Senator Dunnigan representative of everything obnoxious to the average upstate voter, but in his speech he went out of his way to antagonize the great mass of citizens of Monrone County. Senator Slater is probably right in his surmise that Senator Dunnigan never even read the Monroe County tax bill, but killed it on orders from Tammany headquarters in New York, and knew nothing and cared nothing about its purpose or contents." The same newspaper concludes that such incidents as the appearance of Dunnigan in Rochester are "going to be of valuable assistance in making certain that the Republicans retain control of the Assembly next winter."

Rumors Will Not Down

The rumor persists that Governor Lehman is slated for some important place in the National Administration. The Governor himself has stated his determination to serve out his present term. Double Chairman—Postmaster General Farley declared at the Democratic talkfest in Elmira that Mr. Lehman will be renominated and re-elected in 1934. But that doesn't prevent frequent mention of his name as a successor to Senator Copeland and as Secretary of the Treasurer to replace Mr. Woodin. The former is not likely. Dr. Copeland is fond of his job, still keeps up his contact with the public through his newspaper articles telling what to do for halitosis, bunions and other troubles, and in any fight he saw fit to make would probably have the support of Tammany. Anyhow, most people consider the Governorship of New York a higher honor than a U. S. Senatorship. Certainly it seems a sureer road to the Presidency. But the suggestion of the Treasury portfolio is different. Some pretty fair Albany guessers believe that if success of the Roosevelt recovery policies is once assured Governor Lehman may step into the shoes of Mr. Woodin, who, his friends say, really is far from being a well man.

Almost Got a New Word

Few people are aware that this state narrowly escaped having a new word legislated into its vocabulary at the special session of the Legislature. Senator Esquirol, a learned Democrat from Brooklyn, introduced a bill to create the "Greater New York Recreadion Authority". Nearly everybody thought he just didn't know how to spell "recreation", and even in the official publications aside from the bill itself it was given in the last mentioned form. But Mr. Esquirol knows his orthography. He proved that a "recreadion", which is a common thing in Copenhagen, Munich and some other distant towns, is "a portion of a park set aside, landscaped and developed to offer rest, refreshment and outdoor and indoor exercise for young and old amid such surroundings as will contribute to the health and enjoyment of the people", sometimes "including daily setting up exercise, with music, under a physical director." But the bill couldn't pass without a special message from the Governor, and evidently the Governor couldn't find the word in his dictionary, so no message came.

When "Avigation" Was Created

This wasn't the first attempt to create a word by legislation in this state, however. At the regular session of 1931, when it was desired to describe in one word the science of manipulating an airship in all its various phases the word "avigation" was introduced to Albany's waiting statesmen by Assemblyman Condon of Westchester, who wanted a school to teach the thing established at Cornell University. In that case, too, most of them thought he had made a mistake and dropped his "n". In spite of the fact that the law didn't pass, the word has become a perfectly good one in aviation circles and doubtless will be found in future dictionaries.

Steps that Are Justified

If one is to judge by the preparations in New York and Albany, the Fusion forces in these two cities are going to devote no small part of their effort this fall to securing an honest election. The corruption at the polls in both places is notorious. In both places the county and city officials are of no use, not infrequently siding openly with the lawbreakers. The Attorney General of the State is equally useless, some members of his own staff being involved in the frauds. Two appeals to the Governor have been in vain. For some strange reason he does not seem to be concerned at all over the question of election frauds. The fact that all the above mentioned officials are of the same political faith as the party which is the beneficiary of practically all the frauds may be only a coincidence. At any rate, the Fusion forces are amply justified in vigorous action to see that there is an honest election this fall.

SPORTING SPOTLIGHT

FORDHAM 24—ALABAMA 0

Naturally, more was to be expected regarding that Alabama-Fordham clash on the afternoon of October 28. Phil Hickey is not one to drop an argument; especially, a football argument; and more especially a football argument which in any way imputes the stigma of defeat to the Fordham Rams.

Of course, Phil must have been fully aware that Freddie Doddato entertained secret hopes and forebodings with respect to a certain devastation to be wrought by the Crimson Tide of good old Alabama; right down in the Fordham bailiwick, on the aforementioned afternoon. But he hadn't anticipated that Freddie's forecast would be served, through the medium of the public press, along with his Thursday dinner. As a consequence, we were curious to know P. H's reaction to Freddie's blast, printed for the edification of all and sundry, in last week's Sportlight. We had no occasion to be long concerned. Here it goes—

"What audacity! Mr. Doddato seems quite aware that Alabama has had some excellent football teams. He quotes most interestingly of certain incidents from out of the past, involving Stanford, Notre Dame and "Sugar" Cain. But here is ample evidence that his gridiron reveries have carried beyond all reasonable bounds. He, apparently, is not cognizant of the fact that this is another year, and all of the football auguries indicate that this will be Fordham's year. Let me say right here that the Rams will be little annoued, much less deterred, by Alabama. I beg to differ with all that Mr. Doddato has said and if you will be good enough to permit a prognastication upon my part regarding this much-discussed contest, I predict that Fordham will win overwhelmingly 24 to 0, at least."

That was just too much. We must have Phil's side of it—the entire story. So we continued by saying:

"You seem very positive in your opinion, Phil. There must be some good reasons. What are they?"

"In the first place, there's Del Isola", came the answer, "as good a center as will be found anywhere. Strong and rugged and tested under fire. Del passes with unerring accuracy and those bruising center rushes just don't get through at his spot in the line.

The guard positions will be filled by experienced, capable men. The coach will have a hard time choosing from among wolfindale, Waldron, Howell, McArdle and Fitzgerald. At tackle, Uzdorinis as assured of a place and I am quite confident that Fenton will hold down a berth on the other side of the line. In addition to these two, there are Ludwinowitz, Brennan and Tatio, none of whom will have any fears of what may happen when the so-called Tide lines up against them.

"At the ends it will be between Keenan, Nitka, Borden and Bonetski, all of whom were outstanding letter men last year. In the backfield berths, we have Captain Danowski, one of the best ball carriers and passers in the East, and Cowhig, who teams up with him in splendid style at the other half. Harbin may be at quarter. This chap is one of the most colorful individuals to appear on any field. He thinks he is good — and he is good. Or it may be McDermott, a passer of the superior type. Saranskey will probably be fullback. Fast and powerful and equally proficient in offensive of defensive play. Sharing the backfield play with those will be Pepper, Curran, Porlicoric, Piawlock and several others. There will be no dearth of material in the Fordham backfield and Alabama might as well realize it early."

"In addition to these men, all of whom were on last year's squad, there are a number trying out who helped to make history for the Fordham Frosh last year. To mention just a few: Maneace, a brillian back of beautiful build; Miskinos, center; Jellison, center; Rossi, guard; and Gallivan, fullback. These men are due to make trouble for somebody and it is quite as apt to be for Alabama as anyone else."

Somehow your scribe had heard that a new coach was taking hold of Fordham. It seemed a good opportunity to learn more about him.

"Yes", answered Phil, in response to our query. "Sleepy Jim Crowley is the new head coach and he isn't conceding a thing, not even a touchdown, to the squad which Thomas will bring North. Crowley is introducing the Rockne system and with the material he has I look for a very successful season, Mr. Doddato notwithstanding".

"What teams are on your schedule, Phil", was our next inquiry.

"We start off with Albright. This should be a set-up. Also Muhlenbery, West Virginia on October 14, is apt to make trouble. But not serious.. Boston College always puts up a gruelling battle. Then comes the so-called Tide. Things will be so hot for Alabama after the first quarter that the Tide will just evaporate and with it Freddie's divinations.

"St. Mary's will cross the continent on November 4th and then comes the big traditional battle of the year for Fordham— New York University. This is a football natural—and whatever else happens the season will be a success if the Rams defeat N. Y. U. The contest with Oregon State closes the season on November 18. As I said before, I anticipate a very successful season and some pleasing Saturday afternoons ahead, especially that of October, 28. Just be sure you have it down—24 to 0, and that's letting them off easy."

ADDISON, NEW YORK

Cornell Has Bright Prospects For Strong 1933 Football Team

Ithaca, N. Y., Sept. 16—After one week of intensive drills Coach Dobie has worked out several combinations of players which will be the nucleus of his campaign this year. Thirteen of the nineteen men who received their varsity C's last year are the mainstays of the tentative line-ups which meet twice a day for practice before Cornell University opens on September 25. Coach Dobie makes it clear that these combinations are far from permanent, although his first team has eight lettermen on it and three of the best men from last year's freshman team. The line is a veteran one with the exception of right tackle. Here Ed Hutchinson of Chicago, a sophomore, is filling the gap vacated by Captain-elect Frank Murdock. Murdock is in scholastic difficulty and it is not known definitely whether he will be able to play this year. He will be sadly missed as he is a seasoned player and important in the Dobie style of play.

Consistent with the early season practice Coach Dobie is trying out a few youngsters in the backfield. Gordon Stofer of Olmsted Falls, O., and Andy Pierce of La Grange, Ill., both star performers on last year's yearling combination, are new faces. Jake Goldbas, light heavy-weight boxing champion of the University from Utica is playing number 2 back and Walt Switzer of Williamsport is in number 4 position. In order to give the youngsters a chance, Johnny Ferraro, the most versatile back on the team, is on the second team. But nobody takes this too seriously so early in the year. Ferrara is in the pink of condition and is counted on to fill the gap caused by the graduation of Captain Bart Viviano.

As one of Dobie's chief assistants Viviano is imparting to his former team mates and new comers some of that wonderful spirit with which he fired the Cornell teams of the past three years. He will be sorely missed on the firing line, but everyone feels that next best thing to having Bart play, is to have him coach.

A startling change in the line has taken place with Tully Kossack, veteran right guard being trained for the left tackle position. Kossack weighs 191 and is one of the most dependable as well as rugged players on the squad. He formerly played tackle as a high school star and on his freshman team. Harry Shaub of New York has gone to the right guard post and Tom Borland of Oil City, Pa., is filling his shoes at left guard. Frank Irving of Los Angeles, Calif., is playing in Joe Martinez's place at right end and Johnny Wallace of Brooklyn is playing the other flank.

Knoxville Low In Sunday's Tilt

Addison Took Another Tri - County League Victory After Well Played Game.

Addison sent Knoxville home on the small end of a 4 to 2 count Sunday after one of the best played games of the year at Tuscarora Field. Grange pitched fine ball and was backed by sparkling support, three double plays enlivening the proceedings. Grange limited the visitors efforts to seven singles and tightened up well in the pinches. Jimmie Warren and Clark did the box work for the visitors. Warren retired after a hectic session in the third, in which Addison did all their scoring Clark held Addison away from the plate, although the locals had men on bases most of the time. Hewson did another of his heavy afternoon's work. He accepted eleven chances without a slip, acting as middleman in the three double plays by the locals and had another completed but for a dropped ball at its completion. He also worked the opposing pitchers for a double and two walks in four trips to the plate. Riker played a fine game at first. Robbins while he was charged with two slips, handled several hard hit balls like a veteran. John Grange pulled a couple of fine running catches and Riffle and Brennan did likewise. D. Grange fielded the pitching area in fine tyle, starting two double killings. For the visitors, Simonetti was the best bet in the field and at bat. Wayne Kelts and Sawyer likewise played fine ball.

Addison opened the fireworks in the third. D. Grange beat an infield hit and went on to second on an overthrow to catch him. He stole third and counted on Hewson's double. Hickey and J. Grange smashed balls through the infield and then Hoyt and Riker came along with doubles. The net result was four runs and the game. Knoxville broke the ice in the fourth with a walk and several singles in a row They made a valiant try to get somewhere in the ninth, but failed after counting a single run, which they did without producing a single hit, but as the result of two errors and a couple of free passes.

are fronted by a group of units containing classrooms, workshops, libraries, auditorium and executive offices. These buildings are architectural replicas of Independence Hall, Congress Hall and the old City Hall of Philadelphia. Supplementary to this group and adjoining it on the east is the historical village. Here the handicraft arts of the past are presented as they are practiced in their original environment of public buildings and residences which in turn effect the developments of architectural types.

Included in the historical village are the Clinton Inn, built in 1851, a typical hostelry of one hundred years ago, the old stone mill and the steam paddle Mississippi River boat which was plied on Mississippi waters more than fifty years ago. Also the actual old school house where Mr. Ford first attended school occupying a back corner seat. On the first day of school after the building had been removed to its present site, Mr. Ford and his boyhood seat mate again sat in their old corner and inscribed their initials on the desk.

The Lincoln Courthouse was of interest to Mr. Mullaney and other members of the party. This building was erected in 1840 and served for many years as the courthouse of Logan County, Ill. For a period of eight years Abraham Lincoln practiced law within its walls. Particularly impressive, according to Mr. Mullaney, was the wood fire in the fireplace which was lighted by President Hoover on October 21, 1929, at the time of the Edison celebration and has burned continuously ever since.

The Menlo Park group comprises buildings reconstructed from a replica of those used by Mr. Edison at Menlo Park, N. J., during his stay there 1876 to 1886. Streets have been named after those at Menlo Park and the buildings are in their original orientation.

Here may be seen the old laboratory where the first phonograph was produced, also the first practical incandescent lamp. Restored to appear as it was in Mr. Edison's day it contains original instruments and apparatus as well as models of many of his inventions. Also the carpenter shed, the pattern shops and the little glass house, the latter originally a photographic studio, which became the shop where the first successful incandescent lamp bulb was blown.

In a shed adjacent to Menlo Park, according to Mr. Mullaney, is housed the first electric locomotive, also replicas of the two cars which made up the train. The actual Fort Myers, Fla., laboratory, used by Mr. Edison in 1884 to 1885 was also of special interest. In this building the great inventor worked during his sojourns in the warmer climate and in this he perfected the wax record phonograph, an improvement over the tin foil machine.

The actual study and office used by Luther Burbank in conducting his experimental research at Santa Rosa, California is also on display. Also to be seen is the old original Edison homestead which was removed to Dearborn from Vienna, Ont. In this house the father of Edison was born and grew to manhood. When his arrest was sought because of his participation in the rebellion of 1837, the homestead was ransacked by the militia, By that time Samuel Edison had fled across the snow to the boundary and so escaped into the United States. The home is being completely restored by Mr. Ford.

A feature of the Catswold Cottage, built in England 250 years ago which attracted particular attention of the Addison group, was the fact that the roof was completely shingled with stone, and supported by massive oak timbers. The cottage has been furnished throughout with furniture of the sixteenth century. The Kingston Cooper shop, the village blacksmith shop, the first power silk mill, the old saw mill, the grist mill, all seemingly lifted from the America of fifty to one hundred years ago to be handed down through the ages, are included among other most interesting and fascinating features of the historical village.

Mr. Mullaney stated that the crops along most of the country through which he passed in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois had been seriously injured by the extremely dry weather. The potato crop in that region would be about one-half normal and the corn crop a like proportion. He expressed his belief that prices for necessities in Chicago and at the fair grounds were in no way abnormal and took exception to certain published reports that the Fair was being over-commercialized.

During a portion of the time in Chicago, members of the party were guests of Mr. Mullaney's uncle, B. J. Mullaney.

Wellsboro Here Next Sunday

Sike Boom's All Star Cast Will Close League Season Here Sept. 24.

The game to which the fans in this neck of the woods look forward all the year will be played on Tuscarora Field next Sunday, when Sike Boom's Wellsboro team face the Addison team in the last league game of the season on the home field. Both Addison and Wellsboro made strong starts this year, but fell into serious difficulties during "dog days". Both have come back strong now and are battling for second place honors in the Tri-County League. Some of the best ball games of recent years both in the League and before the League was formed have been between Wellsboro and Addison and Sunday's tussle will be no exception.

Wellsboro has a sparkling array of talent. Red Ludium and Morrow are a strong pitching staff, while such well known players as Lloyd, Eddie Hill, the Cruttenden brothers, Bastian, Kline, Hart and others not to forget Sike Boom, the manager and one of the best outfielders in the League. Wellsboro always brings a big delegation along whenever they play and Sunday will see the season closed with one of the big crowds of the year.

Manager Morris will send Grange to the mound and the ability to hand in victories that Don has shown in the last few weeks, will make it hard for the Wellsboro sluggers to get very far. Addison will have their full strength on hand. The rivalry between the two teams is strong and each will be out to win. Addison has now won their last three starts in the League and is anxious to close with a victory. Besides this regular scheduled game, Addison still has two postponed games to play, Blossburg at Addison and Galeton at that place. These games will probably be played in the near future. Efforts are being made to bring Blossburg here the Sunday following the close of the regular season.

Death Takes Sister of The Rev. J. V. Axtell

Mrs. Maude Waterman, 61, a sister of the Rev. J. V. Axtell of Addison, passed away Sunday night at her home in Herkimer, following a two years' illness.

She was born in Index, near Cooperstown, September 3, 1872. When two years of age her family moved to Oneonta, and five years after that to Stephens Point, Pa. After her marriage to Wallace G. Waterman of Richfield Springs, she continued her residence in Pennsylvania until they moved to Herkimer about 15 years ago.

She was always interested in Christian service. In the rural district in Pennsylvania in which she lived, she started and led one of the best organized Sunday schools in the county. In Herkimer the family identified itself with the First Baptist church. She was actively affiliated with the different departments of the church, but was particularly concerned in the Junior Department of the Bible school, which she organized. She was an active member of the W. C. T. U. and held important positions with associational and state Baptist work.

Besides Rev. Axtell she leaves her husband and one daughter, Mrs. Robert Lee Carter of Herkimer, also three other brothers, Floyd D. Axtell, Mayville; Brainard L. Cook, Center Village, and William A. Cook, Fort Plain, and by one sister, Mrs. Mildred C. Dickinson, Dallas, W. Va.

The funeral service was held at the Baptist Church, Wednesday afternoon. Burial was in Oak Hill Cemetery.

"Stick Together" Veterans Are Told By Prominent Speakers

towns on the county committee. Dues were fixed at fifty cents per year in some places, in others there was no charge.

Some of the veterans themselves, the speaker stated, had asked the question "Why do we need a political organization when we have gotten along for ten years without one?" He answered this by saying, "An organization is needed to help overcome the general apathy which exists everywhere toward politics and to get across to veterans the fact that voting is one of the first duties of citizenship."

Mr. Rockwell went on to explain that the constitutions of various existing veteran's organizations such as the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Spanish War Veterans, etc., prohibits political action of any kind upon the part of the organization as a unit and upon the part of all those holding offices in its ranks. "But", he added, "the men who conceived the idea of these veteran's organizations did not intend that the veterans themselves should not take part in politics."

A warning was then sounded by the speaker when he said that organizations of this kind should avoid local, petty scraps. "In Tioga County", he said, "we endorse no candidates for local or county offices because we figure that the interest of veterans in politics should be for the interest of the people as a whole, not any selfish interest of the veterans alone. Local town and county officers have absolutely nothing to do or say about compensation or the various problems of the veterans. . . . . A group of this kind must be organized on absolutely unselfish lines and for one purpose—to get absolutely the best government possible."

Mr. Rockwell then quoted from a speech of Dr. Babb, an authority on veterans matters, in which the latter put complete responsibility upon Senators and Congressmen for recent cuts in veterans allowances, saying that these legislators had no right to turn their power over to the president. He repeated citations of worthy cases who had been cut off without a cent, one of them being a war nurse, now bed-ridden and without any other means of support, who had lost her allowance because of inability to establish a service connection. Veterans in hospitals, he said, had suffered from being moved from one hospital to another.

"There is but one remedy for all this", said the speaker. "Congress meets again soon. We must insist that these men demand back from the president the power that they voted him. Otherwise they will not be returned to office". He mentioned specifically U. S. Senator David Reed of Pennsylvania, "an ally of Mellon and one who has consistently been on the side of big business in approving veteran's benefits" as one who must be retired.

Mr. Rockwell then told of a veteran's meeting in Tioga County to which all candidates were invited and allowed to state their cases. "The purpose of this," he said, "was to get across to these candidates the fact that veterans are actively interested in politics. That was all we wanted.

He concluded by saying, "If you do nothing more than to meet occasionally to discuss political matters you will be doing a great deal. Be careful, however, not to get lined up with any faction, for the veterans themselves will be found aligned with many factions. And you cannot drive people into voting any particular way."

District Attorney Pratt was then introduced. He related a humorous incident centering about his grandfather, David Pratt, a staunch Republican of the old school, who upon leaving the voting booth after casting a ballot for a political enemy within the Republican ranks remarked, "I gave my conscience to God, held my nose and voted the straight Republican ticket."

"But people today are different," said the district attorney. Modern trends have changed things. People do their own thinking now and they act as they think."

"Personally I am a believer in sticking together" ,he said.

He warned as had the previous speaker against the danger of internecine strife, citing the recent milk strike as an instance where bitterness had been created within an organization through division within its ranks. He warned the assembled group to keep the proposed new organization completely divorced from connections with the Legion as the interests of the two organizations were separate and distinct.

"Other things being equal, why shouldn't veterans take an interest in politics?" he asked. "The younger veterans are the rightful legatees of the old Civil War veterans. They have a right to protect their interests," he added.

At this point the district attorney explained that through action of the various legislatures in widening out the laws with regard to welfare, veterans interests had extended to town and county government. In view of this condition, he said, veterans were entitled to ask from every candidate for office, "Do you hold ideas favorable to veterans or do you not?" He stated that in Corning the veterans had encountered much difficulty in obtaining an appropriation from the council which would permit them to take over some of the welfare work" It took education and the threat of defeat to bring them around. But it worked out fine, however", the speaker added.

"You veterans are here to get together", the district attorney emphasized. "When you have men running for office who will stick for you it will pay you to give these men a little extra consideration."

He then told of a visit to the Soldiers' Home at Bath previous to the election last Fall. The men there were extremely antagonistic toward the candidacy of President Hoover because of the bonus army incident. Mr. Pratt warned them, however, that their best interests would be served by the re-election of President Hoover rather than by the election of Mr. Roosevelt. "What I told them there has since come true", he said. He then cited injustices of the present regulations and state emphatically "Dave Reed and his group must go if we can get him out of the way".

"When veterans are up for office or when we have candidates who stand for the things that are due to us rightfully, we must get back of them. We must get together and stick together", he said in conclusion.

Dr. H. E. Auringer, candidate for coroner and well known war veteran, was then introduced. He said in part, "I believe that an organization of veterans is a good thing. I believe it would be a mighty good thing to consider state and national politics. Local politics might split us. To endorse local political candidates would cause trouble and feelings would be aroused. If local candidates are running let them come before a veterans meeting and the vets can judge for themselves."

"We have heard lots of discussion regarding legislation in Washington," the doctor went on. "The Democrats are frantically trying experiments: It is up to us veterans to do the same."

Referring to his own candidacy, he stated he had the endorsement of the local leaders of his party. He went on to say, "I am interested in a local veterans' group and would like to see it go through." With reference to future meetings the doctor said. "Invitations should be sent to all ex-service men. We don't know their politics. We don't care to know. Then we can discuss and get somewhere"

Edward G. Ferguson, prominent local veteran was asked for remarks. "I think I had better keep out of this after all the talk going around Addison a few days ago", he said. In a later statement he explained this allusion by disclosing that talk about town had ascribed his earlier activity in the movement to selfish motives.

Rev. Thomas E. Witney, pastor of the Church of the Redeemer, was called upon. He responded, saying in part, "All of us are automatically in politics. Participation in politics is a God-given right and it would be a good thing if more were interested in politics. If we become more active, possibly then there may be some opportunity for us to help toward the cause of good government. To do so is encumbent upon us as citizens, and directly the country will benefit."

Upon motion of Dr. Stiker the formulation of a policy for the future government of the group was delegated to a special committee of three, to be headed by the chairman of the meeting, William Lewis, who was to have power to appoint the two additional members. Dr. Stiker and Dr. Auringer were appointed as additional members. Later the motion was amended to provide for six members, the other three to be appointed later.

Edward Ferguson was suggested for a place on the committee but he responded by saying, "It has been said about town that I have been taking part in the organization of this group for my own personal gain and also to get the Legion in politics. Until I am through my term as commander of the Legion I perfer not to take an active part in this organization". With respect to the purpose of the organization he went on to say, "Our interests are almost local. One of the reasons for starting is to get justice for veterans from the local political organizations."

Charges were then aired that veterans were not getting a square deal on relief work in this section. One veteran present related of requesting welfare work in the town of Tuscarora and of being told "the government ought to take care of you". William Lewis stated that this same veteran had at one time been promised a time-keepers job but that it had not been given to him. Instead it went to the family of a prominent Democrat, one of the wealthiest farmers in the town of Tuscarora. It was also asserted that veterans had been laid off and Democrats employed instead in the welfare work of various townships.

Dr. W. E. Barron was the last speaker. He said in part, "I am heartily in sympathy with what this proposed organization may bring about. The wise words by Comrade Rockwell and by Comrade Pratt need to be considered. Otherwise it is just possible that this organization after getting off to a good start will defeat its purpose . . . ."

"Personally, I feel different about the matter now than I did a year ago. If the government can throw three billion into little trees, it certainly was not necessary to cut down the veterans' allowances. A lot can be accomplished if you don't blunder. Don't demand too much and you will get more."

It was suggested that a future meeting be held following the caucuses and primary election, also that the various candidates be invited to attend the meeting and state their positions with respect to veterans matters.

Thanksgiving Day. We would also infer from historical data that they helped to introduce into this land the idea of singing in religious services for it is recorded that when they left Plymouth, England on their famous westward journey they were singing some of the Psalms of David. Although they were going to an unknown country where dangers and hardships awaited them they knew that God was their protector and would continue to watch over them. Thus it apparently seemed fitting to them that they should begin the passage with songs of Thanksgiving and praise on their lips.

How many times people have seemingly found song the best way to express their feeling of trust in the Christ. The following story told by Doctor William J. Hart illustrates this fact. Seven men were buried in a Cornish tin mine beneath thousands of tons of rock. The rescuers on their arrival called out loudly. One man answered. "Are you alone?" someone asked. "No, Christ is with me". "Are you injured?" "Yes, my legs are held fast by something." Then he was heard to sing:

"Abide with me!
Fast falls the even-tide
The darkness deepens,
Lord, with me abide!"

Two days later they found him. His legs were crushed by a huge rock which rested upon them. He had gone to be forever with the Lord.

How many times hymns have seemingly been inspired by man's faith in the Christ. The hymn just mentioned, "Abide With Me", was really the result of such a trust. Mr. Henry Lyte, the author, at the time of his writing was living in Brixham, England. He loved his home and he loved his parish but the condition of his health demanded that he seek a different climate. Finally he decided to spend the winter in Italy. When the last Sabbath of his stay in England grew near he determined to preach onece more and to celebrate the Lord's Supper His friends protested, nevertheless, he carried out his intentions. However, he was hardly able to stand. He plead with his people to live holy lives. When he left there were very few dry eyes in the church.

During the afternoon of the Sunday just mentioned Mr. Lyte walked down the terraced walk to the water he loved so well. In silence he returned to the house and went at once to his room. When he joined his family some time later he had in his hand the words to the hymn. The following day he started for Riviera near Nice, France. He never reached his destination. God claimed his soul.

The hymn, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" was also inspired by a strong Christian faith. Doctor John Fawcett, the author, was converted under the preaching of George Whitefield. For a time he attended the services of the church of England. Here he did not feel at home. He then united with the Baptist church in Bradford, England which had just been organized. Zealously he worked with the people. Yet he was not satisfied. He felt that he should preach. Naturally he laid the matter before the Lord in prayer. Finally he came to the conclusion that he truly was called to preach. The small Wainsgate Baptist church near Halifax, England extended him a call. He accepted it and acted as pastor for several years.

As perhaps a surprise there came to Mr. Fawcett while he was preaching at the Wainsgate Baptist church a call from a large church in London. This he accepted. He preached his farewell sermon and prepared to move. Six or seven wagons were loaded with his furniture but the people were determined that he should not go. They almost clung to him and prayed that he might not leave them. As the last wagon was being loaded he and his wife sat down on the packing cases and wept. "Oh John, John, I can not bear this! I know not how to go!" said Mrs. Fawcett. "Neither do I", he replied. He at once gave orders that everything be placed in the house again. The tie of friendship was too strong to break. To London he sent word that he could not come. Then he began his labours anew on a salary of less than two hundred dollars a year. As a commemoration of this event he wrote the hymn:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love.
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.
Before our Father's throne
We pour our ardent prayers;
Our fears, our hopes, our aims are one,
Our comforts and our cares.

We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear.
When we asunder part,
It gives us inward pain;
But we shall still be joined in heart,
And hope to meet again."

That this work has lived on many modern hymn books bear witness.

One of our modern hymns is a real testimony of the author's faith in God. The son of Charles H. Gabriel was leaving this country for France to fight in the World War. He turned to his father to bid him good-bye. What he said in substance was "If we never meet on this shore again we shall meet where the gates swing outward never. Mr. Gabriel returned to his study and wrote the hymn we all love to sing which bears the title suggested by the son: "When the Gates Swing Outward Never."

Many times music has softened hearts which sermons could make no impression on. Rev. W. P. Miller, D. D., writes: "One night in a mission in the lowest portion of the city, I was pleading with a poor fellow whose presence for two or three nights in succession indicated that he was spiritually interested. I soon discovered that he was under deep conviction of sin, but I exhausted my resources in a vain effort to bring him to a decision and was on the point of giving up in despair when the singer began the grand old hymn, 'Just As I Am.' I sat with my hand on his shoulder, and as they sang I just repeated the words with the singers, looking him in the face and at every pause in the music interjecting a petition for his salvation. The hymn was not finished before the light came, and he cried out, with a voice full of joy,

'To Thee whose blood can cleanse each spot,
O Lamb of God I come'."

Rev. James Rankin of the United Presbyterian Church had the following experience during the Civil War. After one of the battles he went to administer to one of the soldiers. First he supplied his physical wants then he prayed with him commending him to Jesus. Next he asked, "Is there anything more I can do for you?" "Yes", said the dying soldier, 'please sing to me "Jesus Lover of My Soul." At first he hesitated for in his church hymns were never sung in the worship of God. But he could not deny the plea. In his heart the hymn had a warm place. Softly and tenderly he sang. As a result a strange quiet like a great benediction, he declared fell upon all. The dying man clasped his hand with a heart full of gratitude while he sang on:

"Hide me, O my Savior, hide,
Till the storm of life is past;
Safe into the haven guide,
O receive my soul at last."

Mr. P. P. Bilhorn tells how he was able to use the hymn "The Bird With a Broken Wing" to win men for Christ. He was out in oue of our western state's prison. After the service the chaplain invited all who wished to speak to do so. Several made use of the opportunity. Mr. Bilhorn then sang the three printed verses of the piece. (The fourth verse had not then been written.) For a moment there was silence. Then a man dressed in prison clothes tremblingly arose. With a quivering voice he said: "Gentelemen, according to the sentiment of that song, although I serve my time, and resolve to do better, I never can rise to the position I once occupied." He dropped back into his seat, covered his face with his hands and began to sob. Others touched with emotion wept with him. "I bowed by head in shame", said Mr. Bilhorn, "as I considered the said truth of this statement." "That night, on bended knees, I said: 'Oh God; I can not sing those verses again; they do not contain the grace of Thy love and power to save and lift men up.' While thus praying, the fourth verse as it now appears in the song, came to me."

In this fourth verse of the hymn "The Bird With a Broken Wing" Mr. Bilhorn has presented the truth that whosover comes to Jesus is saved from every sin, and that the heart which fully trusts him shall receive a crown of glory. By his love and mercy the Master can cleanse every stain and cause the sinner to rise again.

On the next Sunday Mr. Bilhorn again attended the prison service. First he thanked the man who had reproved him. Then he sat down to his little organ and again sang the song. During the singing of the first three verses no one appeared to be especially interested but when the new verse rang out there was a marked change. The man who reproved Mr. Bilhorn the preceding Sunday bowed his head and wept. Many others did likewise. The chaplain then asked all to raise their right hand who were willing to accept the mercy and love of God offered in the fourth verse. Many responded. One of the member was the man who had just reproved Mr. Bilhorn.

A few years afterward Mr. Bilhorn attended a meeting held in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium in Chicago. When he was about to leave a well dressed man stepped up to him and grasped his hand saying: "God bless you, Brother Bilhorn. I'd rather see you than the president of the United States." Mr. Bilhorn replied: "You have the betee of me. Who are you please?" The man was rather surprised. Finally he said, "Don't you remember the fourth verse of 'The Bird With a Broken Wing?'" Mr. Bilhorn then recognized him. Grasping his han dhe said, "How goes it with you?" "Goes it? Why! haven't you heard? I was pardoned a year after you were there. Instead of serving the sentence of eight years, I served a little more than three. I found good employment at once and have since paid my indebtedness with interest. My family are with me again. I am a trustee and deacon in a church and I am as happy as it is possible for me to be."

Some time later Mr. Bilhorn again visited a western city. On a Sunday evening he told in a certain church the story just related; also sang the song. When the service was over a gentleman approached him, handed him his business card and asked him to call on him the next day. He complied with the request. Who was he? He was the prisoner who sat next to the man who reproved Mr. Bilhorn. The fourth verse of the song had persuaded him to become a Christian.

Many of the hymns we possess are really God given sermons in musical form. They are living on, traveling around the world winning men and women; boys and girls for Christ. As illustrations we have three of Fanny J. Crosby's numbers: "Rescue the Perishing", "Saved By Grace" and "Jesus Is Calling.

Must music die? It can not die. God I believe will not permit it to pass away. He wants mankind to praise Him with joyful voice.

"Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord."

What the Maple Leaf Teaches

That morning the rays of the hesitant sun made the yellowing blades of grass sparkle across the council grounds in the center of the village; the moccasins of a father and a son were wet as they entered the corn field.

Finally, the sun chased the dew away and father and son worked diligently to cut the leaves away from the squash and pumpkin vines, for the fruits would need all the sun possible that they might become hard and firm for the winter.

As they worked, many little beetles scurried away and the boy was much interested in the quickness of their jumps. The father showed the boy many little dents in the sides of the squashes and told the boy that the marks showed where the beetles had their dinner many times during the summer.

Homeward on the trail returned the farmer and his son, and as they neared the village they saw a sugar maple all aflame with red and yellow leaves. The father told his son to remind him of the leaves after the evening meal.

So after the warm corn soup had been served in wooden bowls, the son reminded his dad of the colors on the leaves of the maple. Drawing his pipe from his mouth, the father told the boy that the Great Spirit put that sign forth each autumn to remind all people of life.

"You, my son," began the father, "are now like the maple in the springtime, green and strong and bubbling with life, and I am fast turning yellow. Ere a man goes to the land beyond the skies, he is deep red in color, full of thoughts and memories; till at length a gentle breeze comes across the valley of time, and he drops to the ground like the maple leaf to join his father. A maple leaf each year teaches us all the trail of life and the need of service when we are green and strong."

On September 20, a land-grant-radio hour is broadcast from 12:30 to 1:30 eastern standard time. It includes three speeches and two United States Army band selections.

Laying Pullets Balance Ration

By A. G. Philips
Formerly Professor in Charge of Poultry Husbandry, Purdue University

Recent evolutions in poultry feeding methods have shown that laying pullets may have sufficient judgment to proper balance their ration if both hard grains and dry mash are fed in hoppers.

In the past poultrymen have been positive in their belief that unless hard grains are fed in a deep litter, laying birds will not obtain enough exercise induced by scratching for the grain, to keep in good physical condition.

The all mash method of feeding chicks, the battery feeding of hens and other recent practices have shown that compulsory exercise may not be necessary.

All pullets that are put into a laying house in the fall, are not similar as to potential laying capacity, physical condition or appetite, even though every effort is made to make the flock uniform in appearance. Because of these facts, all birds in a flock do not respond equally on a strictly controlled ration.

Recent experiments at the Mass. Experiment Station and Cornell University, (unpublished) have shown that Rhode Island Reds and Leghorns may be given hard grains fed in a hopper, (along with dry mash) instead of in the litter, with entire satisfaction from the standpoint of mortality and egg production. All flocks will not consume the same proportions of mash to grain. Some will eat more mash in the fall while others will prefer more grain. They seem to balance the grain and mash to their needs and in a year's time will use more grain than mash.

This plan of leaving grain before laying birds all the time has several distinct advantages, namely, lower total cost of feed, more sanitary conditions for feeding, less chance for infections by parasites and worms and less labor. One thing must not be overlooked, vigilance on the part of the feeder cannot be reduced. He must watch his birds and how they consume their feed. The total mash intake must not go below 250 pounds per month per 100 layers. If it does the grain hopper should be closed for part of the day or a wet mash fed once each day. This is the only particular feature of the feeding plan that neds watching. Keep the hoppers reasonably well filled with fresh feed and the birds will do the rest.

FROZEN DESSERTS

Here is another of the delicious frozen desserts recommended by the Consumers Information Service of the New York State Department of Agriculture and Markets:

MAPLE PARFAIT

1/4 cup maple syrup
1-1/2 cups whipping cream
3 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla
Pinch of Salt

Heat syrup in double boiler; add slowly to well beaten egg yolks and beat until mixture is thick and light. Blend into stiffly beaten egg whites. Chill. Add whipped cream, salt and vanilla, freeze without stirring.

This is one of a series of frozen dessert recipes prepared for this paper by the Consumers Information Service. Watch for others.

How What and Why?

This paper has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State colleges of agriculture and home economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope, and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one post card. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

Care of a Cistern

Mrs. D. M. W. writes: "We have a large open cistern in our cellar which runs over every time we get much rain. We never have been able to use all the water in it but we empty and clean it every fall. During hot weather the water has a foul odor. Also we have a large well, stoned up and filled around the top with large stone and gravel. It has a building over it, with ice in one part and milk, with pump, in the other part. A pipe also leads to the barn where water is pumped for animals. This summer the water which was pumped to the milk room had an amber color, while that from the faucet in the barn is clear. Last winter we packed the ice in chestnut sawdust. Before that we always packed it in pine or hemlock sawdust. Could the sawdust be the cause of the color? If so, why should not the barn faucet show the same color?"

To these queries, Professor A. M. Goodman gives this answer: "Since you clean the large open cistern every fall and still find that there is an odor from the water during hot weather, I assume that leaves or other organic substance get into the cistern during the year. If the down-spouts are fitted with strainers to remove these, or if there is a down-spout switch outside of the cistern so that the first of the rain can be allowed to waste on the ground and the water turned into the cistern only after the roof and eaves-trough have been rinsed off, you should be able to overcome your difficulty. This procedure requires a good deal of attention, so I venture two other suggestions; one is that you place in the cistern a basket of about a bushel capacity, made with hardware cloth or other galvanized wire, and filled with fairly large pieces of charcoal. Charcoal has a remarkable capacity for absorbing flavor and odor from water. A more desirable but more expensive device would be a sand and charcoal filter. Such a filter is described on page 11 of Farmers' Bulletin 1448, published by the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington.

In regard to the well in the ice house, I should suppose from your statement that water seeps from the ice into this well. The top of the well will not exclude surface water. To remedy this situation, I would suggest that the large stone and gravel fill be removed to a depth of four or five feet, and that the stone curbing for this distance be laid up in mortar or concrete, and that a well tramped and soaked fill of clay or other impervious soil be placed around the outside of this tight curbing, and that this should extend out to the original earth excavation. Drainage water from the ice should be conducted away from the well. I send you a copy of Cornell extension bulletin 247, which gives directions. From the information in your letter, I am unable to say why the water comes clear from the faucet in the barn and discolored from the pump at the milk house, though this may be due to a difference in depth of the ends of the intake pipes within the well.

In discussing your problem with the state chemist, Dr. L. J. Cross, he has suggested that a temporary relief of the trouble you are having with this well may be gained by placing four or five pounds of hydrated lime in the well. This will tend to make the water hard, but if it is used only for animals and for cooling milk, hardness would not be objectionable.

Ropy Milk

G. H. F. says: We buy milk from a neighbor who has but one cow. Cream rises on milk which stands overnight, but if it stands during the next 24 hours, it is stringy. Please tell me about it. Is it fit to use?

Professor H. E. Ross of the dairy department answers: "Ropy milk is caused by germs, and a number of different organisms cause this condition. We used to think that only one particular organism caused ropy milk, but Dr. J. M. Sherman and Dr. C. N. Stark of the Cornell dairy department have investigated this problem and have found that a number of organisms cause the trouble. As far as we can determine, the only remedy is to keep the germs out of the milk. They are rather hard to destroy by the ordinary temperatures of pasteurization. Keeping germs out of milk, which means keeping it clean and cool and covered at all times, and a thorough sterilization of all the utensils, will, I think, remove the difficulty.

When this trouble has been traced to a farm, conditions have been bettered by a liberal use of lime on the stable floor, but this alone may not always be counted on to remedy the situation.

So far as we know, the condition is perfectly harmless, as we have never known a single case of illness caused by ropy milk. It is, however, very disagreeable.

Adjustment Plan For Wheat Closes September 25

Calls for 15 Per Cent Reduction—Purpose is to Adjust Production to Effective Demand.

Farmers who wish to cooperate with the wheat adjustment program should execute contracts on or before September 25 which the farm bureau advises is the closing date for the sign up campaign.

The plan calls for a 15 per cent reduction of acreage as compared to the average of the last three years. Compensation to the amount of 54 per cent of the crop at the rate of about 25c a bushel will be paid those farmers who co-operate with the program.

It is further agreed that the acreage sown to wheat in '34 and '35 will be reduced to a percentage of not more than 20 per cent of the base acreage, that of 1929-1932, and the cash payment will be continued during three years.

The purpose of the program is to adjust production of wheat to the effective demand. Contracts and detailed information can be obtained from the Farm Bureau office.

Death of Lorenz Angst, Resident of Severence District

Lorenz Angst, aged 75, was discovered dead in the kitchen of his farm home in the Severance District on the morning of September 16, by his brother, Michael Angst, of Thurston. Mr. Angst, apparently had been about to wash when stricken with the fatal attack for he had fallen by the wash stand in the kitchen, pulling it over on him as he fell.

As it was known Mr. Angst suffered from high blood pressure, it is thought probable that death was caused by a cerebral hemorrhage or a heart attack. Due to his physical condition his brother made it a habit to visit him each morning to see if he was alright and he was on one of his daily visits that morning when he discovered the body. Despite his precarious health, Mr. Angst insisted on living in his own home.

Mr. Angst was born in Tioga, Pa., February 28, 1858, the son of Charles and Catherine Weber Angst. He moved to Risingville in 1875 with his parents and has lived there ever since. He never married.

Mr. Angst was clerk in a general store for some years, did some road work and for many years interested in farming. He was clerk of the town of Thurston for some time and was prominent in local Democratic circles, being a staunch supporter of that political party. He was highly regarded by a large number of friends.

Surviving are one sister, Mrs. James P. Hanrahan of Risingville; two brothers, Fred, of Auburn and Michael of Thurston; and the following nephews and nieces: Mrs. James Leach, Gerald and Rolland Angst of Thurston; Mrs. Leon Snearly of Gang Mills; Miss Irene Hanrahan, Miss Esther Hanrahan, Miss Eleanor Hanrahan of Corning; Miss Helen Hanrahan of Gang Mills; John Hanrahan of Risingville; Mrs. Charles Devine of Gang Mills; Clarence Angst of Ithaca; Guy Angst of Rochester; Craig Angst of Coopers.

The funeral was held Monday afternoon from the home of his sister, Mrs. J. P. Hanrahan, and from the Risingville Methodist Episcopal Church. Bearers were Theron Smith, Emron Jerry, Edward Vosburg, Irving Yost, Bert Koon and Benjamin LeBar. Burial took place in the Town Line Cemetery, Cameron Mills.

Old Home Day Postponed To Next Year

According to Recommendations of Committee in Charge—Felt That Insufficient Time Remained For Preparation and That Better Financial Backing Could Be Obtained Later.

At a meeting of the Old Home Day Committee of Williams-Greengrass.. Post,.. No... 730,.. American Legion, held last evening, it was voted to recommend to the Post at to-night's meeting that the proposed Old Home Day, scheduled for October 7, be postponed until some more advantageous time during the summer of 1934.

It was felt that the season would be inappropriate, also that insufficient time remained to complete arrangements for a celebration of the type desired, also that greater financial backing to put the affair over in a big way could be obtained at a later date.
